Conventional medicines produce chemical effects that control or suppress unpleasant symptoms, while homeopathic remedies stimulate a self-healing response from the body. The two work in different ways, and therefore don't run at cross-purposes the way two conventional medicines might. BUT there are two things you should be aware of if using both together. They are:

Differences Between Homeopathy & Conventional Medicine

Unlike allopathic medicines, homeopathy cure focuses on building and strengthening body's natural response to cure a disease or a disorder. It helps boost the immune system instead of acting against it (as in allopathic medicines). For example, diarrhoea in allopathic medicine will be cured by using medicines that induce constipation. Whereas homeopathy relies on creating the similar ...

Conventional medicine is a very blunt instrument. Part of its success lies in this very general nature. The sheer number of possible factors that need to be considered for effective treatment with homeopathic remedies have meant that it has required a long, and often expensive consultation with a trained specialist.

In some cases the site confuses homeopathy with other systems of medicine but attributes harm to homeopathy. Some of the people used conventional treatments first and without success before turning to homeopathy. I believe the site includes some 47 cases. Please compare that to the fact that 784,000 Americans die every year as a result of choosing conventional care and conventional treatments ...
